Royal Welcome to Their Gracious Majesties

WHAT IT MEANS TO THE DOMINION

THE VISIT OF THEIR MAJESTIES IS OF GREAT SIGNIFICANCE TO CANADIANS

With the arrival of King George and his gracious Queen at Quebec on May 15 they are honoring this country by their first official visit to the Empire overseas as our monarchs. It is eminently fitting that Canada, as the premier Dominion of the British Commonwealth of Nations, should be so privileged. Likewise, it is equally important that, being thus signally honored, we should express our appreciation of the distinction conferred upon us by extending to their Majesties a truly royal welcome. And there is no doubt that all Canadians, realizing the tremendous significance of this occasion, will bend every effort toward making the event one that will live has proved himself truly worthy of the great task which destiny called him to perform. In appearance, word and deed a royal Sovereign, he has proven himself entirely capable of the great duties of his royal station. Well able to inspire his people with that sense of deep loyalty that has created and upheld our glorious Empire, His Majesty is in every way entitled to the wholehearted expressions of homage that will greet him as he journeys across Canada.

Side by side with the King will travel Her Gracious Majesty. As a Queen, a wife and a mother, Elizabeth has endeared herself to all the people of the Empire. By her great devotion to her husband, such as befits the rank of the royal visitors, nevertheless there is far more significance to this visit than just a monarchical gesture on the part of their Majesties. When we consider the critical condition of world affairs to-day, it is obvious that the only thing which can assure the preservation of the Empire, is unity among all the members of that vast domain. We do not believe for one moment that any true Canadian needs to be reminded of his duty and responsibility as a citizen of the British Empire. The loyalty of Canadians, in time of peace or war, has never been questioned. Nevertheless, the presence of our King and Queen, as they travel across our great country, will serve to to get a glimpse of King George and his Queen, and also to enable their Majesties to meet the local officials. Needless to say, the loyalty of a Canadian who has but a few moments to express his sentiments is equally as sincere and enthusiastic as that of the more fortunate ones who may be privileged to experience a more extended reception during the tour.

The King and Queen will not be able to leave the immediate precincts of the stations on these short stops and will not review any guards of honor. Her Majesty will accept just one bouquet of flowers at each halt and that one bouquet will be from the citizens generally and not from any individual or organization.

Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, and their children, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose. Unfortunately the children will not accompany their royal parents on the Canadian tour. Nevertheless, they hold a place of their own in the hearts of all Canadians who look forward to seeing them here at some future date.

long in the memories of both visitors and hosts.

Only once previously has the King visited these shores. That was when he came here as Prince George, with no thought then that one day he would return in state as ruler of the Empire. Now he comes to us, not as a Prince, free from the onerous burden of affairs of state, but as a King, with all the responsibility that the position entails upon his shoulders and in his heart, as he has made abundantly clear, the best interests of his faithful subjects.

True Monarch

Ascending the throne as he did, under the most exceptional circumstances in England's history, King George the Sixth the King, and her beautiful children, the two "white roses of York"; by her quiet naturalness, and her continual interest in the welfare of the people, she has proven herself equally worthy with the King of occupying Britain's throne. To their Majesties Canada extends a sincere welcome, a hope that their visit will be one of unadulterated enjoyment, and a one hundred percent pledge of loyalty to themselves, the Mother Country and the Empire.

Great Significance

It must be borne in mind that this visit of King George and his Queen is not merely a ceremonious procession across the Dominion from coast to coast. Granted that the tour must, and will be, strengthen the ties that bind us to them in loyalty and service.

Loyal Welcome

During the course of their journey across the country, King George and Queen Elizabeth will make numerous brief stops of a maximum of ten minutes duration. Short though these pauses must necessarily be, they will afford Canadians an opportunity to see their King and Queen, and, by their presence, exhibit their loyalty to the Crown. While these brief visits will not permit the ceremonies possible in other centres where their Majesties may linger longer, the stopping of the royal train in this manner has been planned with the purpose of permitting as many Canadians as possible

Any addresses designed for presentation to Their Majesties at these stops will not be read, but will be handed to an official assigned to that duty. We stress these short stops on the royal itinerary, rather than the longer scheduled visits, because we feel that many Canadians will appreciate even this hasty glimpse of the King and Queen which, under the circumstances, is all that can be granted to them. In any case, whether the royal visitors linger a moment, an hour, or a day, they will find the citizens of this Dominion of one accord in their loyalty of welcome.

BLUENOSE DISTINCTION

Not many, outside the legal profession, know that Nova Scotia has the only government that cannot be sued for damages.

Even the federal government can be sued with its own consent, for the obtaining of which certain definite procedures are laid down; and so can the governments of the remaining provinces. But the Nova Scotia government cannot even consent to be sued if it wanted to, no legal channel existing for that purpose.

Whether this is due to just an oversight, or to the astuteness of some of the original founders of our sturdy peninsular democracy, no one at this date seems to be able to say. At any rate, the fact remains that you can't sue the Nova Scotia government.

FRED PETRIE PASSES

FOLLOWING ACCIDENT

People of the district were shocked to learn of the passing of Fred Petrie, brother of Mr. Andrew Petrie, at Hillcrest on Friday morning, following an accident in the Hillcrest mine the day previous. Though at first his condition was not considered very serious, later examination revealed internal injuries from which he passed away. Left to mourn are his wife and two small children, with whom sympathy is extended. Funeral took place on Sunday afternoon last, with A. E. Ferguson, of the Crows' Nest Funeral Home, in charge of arrangements. Following services held at the Andrew Petrie home and the United church, the remains were laid to rest in the Hillcrest cemetery.

Deceased was one of a family of twelve children, four of whom perished in the Hillcrest explosion in 1914. Besides his wife and two small children, he is survived by two brothers, Andrew of Hillcrest, and John of Vancouver; and two sisters, Mrs. E. Fisher and Mrs. F. Wolstenholme, both of Bellevue.

While T. McDowall, of Calgary, has sold half his winning sweep ticket for $14,000, he still has a chance to pull down up to $70,000 more. McDowall is a bank clerk, and intends to resign and take a trip to the Old Country.

THE TOWN OF BLAIRMORE

SCHOOL CHILDREN RECEIVE
ROYAL VISIT MEMENTOS

Local public and high school children assembled in the Columbus hall at 11 a.m. on Tuesday to receive mementos commemorating the visit to Canada of Their Most Gracious Majesties King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth.

Assembling first at the central school grounds, the children, some five hundred in number, were lined up in procession form, each class being marshalled by their teacher, and paraded by way of Seventh Avenue and Victoria Street to the hall, where seating space was provided for them.

The programme, in charge of Mr. Donald MacPherson, principal, opened with the singing of "O Canada." The chairman then briefly explained the purpose of the meeting. Prayer for Peace and Divine Protection for Their Majesties was offered by Rev. E. B. Arrol, B.A., followed by an address on the Royal Visit in French by Mr. Racette. "God Save The King" was next sung in French by the high school students.

One of the most important items on the programme came next, when certificates were presented by Mr. S. G. Bannan, representing the school board, to four clever students in First Aid, namely, Joe Gillain, Armand Houze, John Goddard and Wilfred Langdon. Mr. Bannan complimented the boys on their efforts and success, and hoped that they would continue and some day become, not only experts in First Aid, but to be known as clever along the line of medicine and surgery.

An able address on the subject of "Their Majesties" was delivered by Rev. Mr. Arrol, followed by a selection by the United church junior orchestra, and remarks by Mrs. S. Simister, regent of Crows' Nest Chapter of the I.O.G.E.

Next came the most important of all, to which the children had been anxiously looking forward for weeks, the presentation of souvenir prize medallions. Starting from the primary class, the children marched single-file to the platform, where at the hands of Mr. Bannan and Mrs. Simister they accepted the much coveted mementos.

Thanks were extended to Rev. Dean M. A. Harrington for the use of the hall for the occasion, and to the orchestra for their kind attendance.

The "National Anthem" brought the programme to a close at 12:15.

The programme was originally planned for Victoria Day, but owing to so many adults and children desiring to leave earlier for Calgary, it became necessary to advance the date one day.

The residence of A. Biegan, on the corner of Seventh Avenue and Stuart Street, has been very much improved by the installation of a cement foundation and basement.

Canadian turkeys stand high in the estimation of the British trade. In a recent issue, The Fish Trades Gazette, a leading British poultry trade journal, reflects this opinion in the following extract: "The best demand has been for the Canadian birds, when, although dearer than the Continentals, are a far better turkey; they are graded so well. Not only does a buyer get the correct weight, but the birds are all young."

The inquisitive traveller saw an Irishman on a river bank, and watched him hauling up water. "How long have you been doing this?" asked the traveller. "Tin years, sor." "And how many bucketsful do you carry off in a day?" "Tin to 15, sor." "Dear, dear! Now, how much water would you say you had carried since you started?" "All the water you don't see carry now, sor."

NEWS FROM EDMONTON

(T. B. Windross)

Edmonton, May 22.—Two outstanding events have marred the political history of Alberta in the past week, the open attack on the Social Credit administration of Premier Aberhart by a group of Social Credit independent members of the legislature at a largely attended Calgary meeting, and the decision of the provincial Liberal organization in Calgary to co-operate with all other parties opposing the present regime.

Perhaps one should also include Aberhart's further "hints" concerning a possible election within "three to fourteen months." It is predicted freely now that the "three," not the "fourteen," will be nearer the truth.

Four non-caucusing Social Credit members, A. E. McLellan, Inisfaul; S. A. G. Barnes, Edmonton; Charles Cockroft, Stettler, and A. L. Blue, Ribstone, declared the Social Credit movement in Alberta was "killed by hypocrisy and dishonesty," during their attack on the government in Calgary.

Mr. Barnes said: "Aberhart's attitude is neither reasonable, democratic or fair."

Mr. McLellan said: "Lack of honesty, and graft on the part of members and the general air of hypocrisy and lying has completely destroyed the party in many constituencies."

Mr. Blue said: "The treasury branches have nothing to do with Social Credit. They were set up to create jobs for healers and mugg-wumps."

Mr. Cockroft said: "You can't slap a man in the face and expect him to be a customer."

HILLCREST HAPPENINGS

A very delightful miscellaneous shower was held in the Catholic hall on Thursday evening last in honor of Miss Margaret Kyle, bride-elect of June. She was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, for which she thanked those present in a few well chosen words. What was played, prizes going to Mrs. H. Douglas and Mrs. W. Fisher.

Rinaldi D'Amico returned to his home here from Edmonton, where he had been a patient in hospital, due to injuries sustained last fall.

A very delightful farewell party was held at the home of Mrs. G. E. Cruickshank on Monday evening in honor of Mrs. Stinton Marshall, who will be leaving Hillcrest shortly. Cards were played, prizes going to Mrs. W. Fisher, first; Mrs. J. Mackie, second; and Mrs. J. Frommenger, third. After an enjoyable supper, Mrs. Cruickshank, on behalf of the gathering, presented Mrs. Marshall with a beautiful silver coffee percolator.

Mrs. R. Makin left Tuesday for the Old Country, where she plans on spending the summer visiting relatives and friends.

The Hillcrest Fish and Game Association held their semi-annual smoker in the community hall on Tuesday night, when a very interesting programme was rendered and an enjoyable time was had.

Premier Aberhart took an air trip into the Peace River country this week. By so doing, it is possible to pass over various constituencies without seeing them. Mike remarked yesterday that the premier's next flight would be made to pass over his constituency of Okotoks-High River.

Headache Treatment

Say Oxygen Can Relieve And Heal Many Ailments

A new method of treating all grain headaches, gas gangrene, and other diseases is reported as an unexpected development from experiments in stratosphere flying and deep-sea diving.

Three scientists of the Mayo clinic, Rochester, Minn., exhibited to members of the American Medical Association at St. Louis, Mo., for their 90th annual meeting, how cheap oxygen can relieve and heal many ailments which might otherwise be fatal.

The new treatment resulted directly from experiments in cooperation with the United States Army, navy and various airlines. Dr. Walter M. Boothby, Dr. W. R. Lovelace and Dr. A. H. Bubulian found that the oxygen mask which they had developed for aviators was a highly useful aid to medicine.

Depends On Diet

Eggs With Pure White Yolks Have Been Produced

Colorless egg yolks, white as snow when hard-boiled, were described by Kansas State College chemists to the American Chemical Society at Baltimore.

The yolks turn white when hens are fed on a ration free from the yellow nutrient, carotene. The chemists said snow white egg yolks are "nothing new" but they are finding useful facts for egg producers in effects of hen-food on color of yolks. One troublesome color is olive-green yolks. These colors are caused, in considerable loss to poultrymen as customers shy at eating them. At Kansas State they now produce green yolks at will by feeding the hens molasses and oat grass.

Hidden Document

Paper Establishing British Rule In New York Is Found

Hidden for 255 years, the document establishing British rule over New York has been found and brought to America. The letters patent, signed by King Charles I. in 1647, authorizing Edmund Andros to take possession of the colony, then ruled by the Dutch and called New Netherland, was discovered in possession of the Andros family in England. Acquired through a gift by William Everts, a Benjamin, the document has been placed on exhibition by the New York Historical Society.

Rapid Expansion

New enterprises expand rapidly, but none more so than airmail delivery. In ten years airmail letters sent from England have increased from a half million to a hundred million each year.

What puzzles us is why so few people get too hard up to buy gasoline.

The Philistine of the Bible may have come to Palestine from Crete.

Where Safety Lies

Armed Might Of Britain Is Her Only Defense

The London Daily Mail says the Hitler attitude to the world is contemptuous. But the limit of human bug was reached when the totalitarian States produced their moral indignation at Britain's increased rearmament programme. They said our $380,000,000 defence expenditure was a violation of the spirit of Munich. Well, Hitler has killed Munich. Now perhaps Britain will be allowed to defend herself without being called ferocious. Mr. Chamberlain was right to couple Munich with wholesale rearmament. Who doubts that now? Our safety depends upon our own armed might. Our preparations must be intensified. We must be ready to stand alone, if need be. It would be folly to rely upon visionary scheme of collective military action.

Cost Of Armaments

Estimated That The World Is Spending A Billion A Month

The Bank for International Settlements estimated the world is spending $1,000,000,000 a month on armaments.

Based on statistics which the bank said were incomplete but nevertheless showed the trend of defence expenditures, the resume said the total cost of war implemets during 1938 had increased six times that of 1928.

"Moreover, the burden threatens to be higher," said the bank. The bank said mounting defence expenditures also are "becoming a predominant factor in every sphere of economic life and raise problems of a fundamental nature which must be faced in all countries whatever their political or economic orientation."

Gardening

Staking

Dahlia, tomato, large cosmos or nicotiana, young shade trees, new climbers of benefit from some artificial support while they are getting started.

For tall individual flowers or tomatoes, 6-foot stakes of wood or steel are advisable and the plants tied to these loosely with soft twine or raffia. Stouter and perhaps longer stakes will be used with shade trees, and correspondingly shorter ones for the smaller flowers. With vines getting ready to cling to fence or wall, string is used. For the climbing tape or staples where it is impossible to tie.

Filling In

It is a good plan, old gardeners state, to use started annual flower plants of the kinds mentioned above for planting among tulips and other spring flowering bulbs which will be springing their heads in a few more weeks. They need something to hide dying foliage. Then again quick growing annuals will always be useful for filling any blind spots in the perennial beds where winter has been unusually severe.

Garden Fests

Garden insect enemies are divided into two groups—those that eat holes in the foliage and those that suck out the juices. For the first named, poison is usually applied, while the suckers are attacked with a burning spray which penetrates. Often when both are present, a combination of poison and burning spray, such as lime sulphur and arsenate, gives the best results. The damage from the sucking insects is usually quite apparent, but the presence of the other kind is only shown at first by a wilted or withering of the foliage. For sucking pests, chief of which are the aphids or plant lice, spray with water or a quarter pound of soap to a gallon and a half of water; nicotine sulphate, or "Black Leaf 40," or other repellent secured from a reliable seed store.

The Woman Juror

A Little Explanation By The Judge Changed Her Mind

The judge was about to hear an action in the High Court when a woman juror rose and requested exemption from service on a plea that she was a non-believer in capital punishment.

"But this is a civil action," the judge explained, "and has nothing whatever to do with capital punishment. It is brought by a woman who gave her husband two hundred pounds to buy her a fur coat. The husband, instead of buying the coat, lost the money gambling, and now his wife is suing him for the return of her two hundred pounds."

"Oh, indeed, is that it?" replied the juror, relieved. "Then I've no objection to serving." She pondered a moment and then added thoughtfully: "And, perhaps, after all, I was wrong about capital punishment."

As I always say, Lady, when a chap has no butter on his shirt he ought to do one of two things—get married or get divorced.

Salamanders cannot stand great heat.

Industrial Development Board Of Manitoba Is Reaching Out

(By G. E. Miles)

When we as everyday citizens hear or read of an organization such as the Industrial Development Board, it is very natural with our approval and we automatically wish it well and give it our endorsement.

But as everyday citizens of Manitoba don't you think we should know more about it, how it functions, why it is necessary, and what does it mean to each one of us?

Historical facts and statistics, unless you want them, can be tedious, and if these few words awaken your interest we can go into them later, therefore in these few moments we will treat this subject as if you are hearing of the Industrial Development Board for the first time and we will confine ourselves to one phase of it in which I am keenly interested, namely "New Industries."

You all know Emerson's adage of "He who builds a better mousetrap, and the world will beat a path to his door."—this is a very old grain of truth in this but unless that manufacturer of mousetraps brings out a mousetrap that is better than the people who are troubled by the mice I know that his competitor who has a mousetrap that is better, but really sells it, will have a much better turnover of mousetraps.

Manitoba is just in that position; instead of mousetraps we have the better manufacturing locations to sell. To sell Manitoba to the prospective manufacturer is the purpose of the New Industries Committee. The members of our Board, St. Boniface, and Manitoba. We are just as interested in securing a new enterprise, Sir Edward Beatty, chairman and president of Canadian Pacific Railway, said in an address at Montreal.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Advertising and Sales Executives Club of Montreal, the railway head declared that the "inspiration for that progress, so far as we may contribute to it, must come from a genuine conviction on our part in the wisdom and vision of the policies of government."

Sir Edward said he was "far from content with what the railways of Canada have done to meet their own problems, but this is more than an accident and attributed this to an unusual arrangement, under which we have an absurd competition between two great railway systems—one publicly and the other privately owned."

NEW
SOFT-TOE TYPE SLIMMERIZER

Now who comprise this Board and why do we say we want the help of our Government? This is more than a man job, it is your privilege and right. It is your privilege and right to help the Government and to try to explore the possibilities of establishing New Industries and help in the development of established industries, and remember we are not experts, just everyday citizens.

It is true we have a full time secretary who can claim a spot in the expert class, but this is more than a man job, it is your privilege and right. It is your privilege and right to help the Government and to try to explore the possibilities of establishing New Industries and help in the development of established industries, and remember we are not experts, just everyday citizens.

Unlimited electric power at very low cost. A market remote from industrial areas. A high grade labor.

An imposing list of natural resources.

A loyal people who will buy a made in Manitoba product in preference to all others.

There are a number of moments and emphasize that last point. It surely requires no urging, but it is one point that does help each one and it is a help that each one of us can give without a cent of cost, if we, a half million Manitobans, ask our suppliers for preferably made in Manitoba goods, the establishing of new industries will follow as surely as the night the day.

I wish a large number of you would call on or write our secretary for a very interesting booklet on just what is made in Manitoba. I am not sure about mousetraps but I do know we make venetian blinds, mechanical race-horse automobiles, windmills, bathing suits and nearly all the other articles you and I can think of.

There is one man in this province I would like to have a talk with, and that is the man who is quite sympathetic to and probably belongs to his local Board of Trade, but some of the things he does not know about this business of new industries, and it is a job his local board and the Industrial Development Board at St. Boniface, and his fellow townsmen's knowledge and help they can give. They can help their local blacksmith's or machine shop business to add quite a few small lines of production. A small farm, a small mill, etc. would do really well in his locality, and he might know of some articles that he now produces somewhere in Manitoba could be made to real advantage.

Then again, the Board here often learn of some good shop with knowledge and ability to produce a small piece of some financial help. But don't send in any money to be in and investigate and if your judgment is good you can turn over the money to the majority investors in Coca Cola did or other factors of Detroit who put in a small amount with an inventor of automobiles.

I am afraid that this is rambling kind of talk but it was not supposed to be informative, the idea was to get you to think, to talk, to find out all about the Industrial Development Board and then to fit yourself into the picture and make this Province more industrially minded, to make each one of us a little more prosperous, to help provide real opportunities for our Manitoba boys and girls and to get you to find out the very natural with Emerson's motto, mousetrap, we have this perfect thing to sell, and I think you will agree with me that Emerson was wrong, that not only do you have to have a better product than your neighbor but you have to sell it, and so let us all know this opportunity that we have to sell and let us all do our part, let us all become active participating members of the New Industries Committee of the Industrial Development Board of Manitoba.

PAUL THINKS IN WORLD TERMS

Golden text: I am not ashamed of the gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth Romans 1:16-17.

Lesson: Romans 1:1-17; 3:21-30; 6:1; 10:1-13.

Devotional reading: Romans 15:1-13.

Explanations And Comments

The Salvation of the Letter, Romans 1:1-7. Moffatt's translation makes the meaning a little clearer: Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, set apart for the gospel of God (which he promised old by his prophets in the holy scriptures), concerning his Son, who was born of David's offspring by the Holy Spirit and installed as Son of God with power by the Spirit of holiness when he was raised from the dead—confessing to him as Lord, through whom I have received the favor of my commission to preach the gospel to all men, that I might bring about the obedience of all the Gentiles to him who are beloved by God, called from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

"I received real genius so to phrase an opening salutation as to embody the substance of the epistle which followed. Such salutations were commonly more conventional forms, like those with which modern letters are begun and ended. They designated the writer and the reader and included some word of greeting; Paul, however, using the opportunity to declare his authority as an apostle, to describe the Christians in Rome, and to define the gospel of which he was about to write" (C. R. Erdman).

Paul was a servant of Jesus Christ. It is remarkable how many more food combinations than any fastidist. There is not the slightest ground for believing that a food combination of proteins, starches and carbohydrates is proper proportions, will do any injury to the user. As a matter of fact the best diets are combinations of these food elements and if we wish to gain the highest benefits from our foods, the diet must be balanced in these elements as these elements are concerned. The public should turn a deaf ear to the oft-repeated nonsense about proteins and starches.

Strip Farming

Best Method For The Control Of Wind Erosion Of Soils

Strip cropping, which is the practice of producing farm crops in strips instead of in blocks in large fields, is a practical method of controlling wind and water erosion of soils, states Mr. A. Leahy, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. The method of farming is being widely followed in the Prairie Provinces for the control of soil drifting but its value in checking soil erosion by wind has not been generally recognized in Canada.

Strip cropping, commonly known as strip farming in Canada, as practiced for the control of soil drifting, consists of growing farm crops in long narrow strips, or rows, alternating strips placed crosswise of the prevailing winds without regard to the slope of the land. Except where the strips may by chance lie across the slope, such an arrangement is effective only in retarding wind erosion. Where it is desired to check the surface run-off water and thus prevent the soil from washing down the slope, a system of contour or field strip cropping should be practiced.

Contour strip cropping is the production of crops in long, relatively narrow strips placed crosswise to the line of slope and on the contour of the land. Field strip cropping is a modification of contour strip cropping that the crops are produced in strips laid out crosswise to the general slope but not necessarily on the contour. This method of strip cropping is sometimes employed on land that is undulating with no definitely defined slope and where contour strip cropping would be impracticable. While field strip cropping is a poor substitute for contour strip cropping, it is far superior to exposing entire fields to unchecked erosion.

NONSENSE ABOUT PROTEINS AND STARCHES

"You must not eat proteins and starches at the same meal," says the faddist. It is this theory were carried out our meals would be inadequate and we would suffer from malnutrition in the midst of plenty. Yet this fad is proclaimed far and wide by quacks, faddists and the advertisers of so-called special cures.

Nature has combined proteins and starches in many foods used by people from day to day. Green peas contain about seven per cent. of protein and, on the average about the same of starch. Who refuses to eat green peas on this account? Potatoes contain about 1.8 per cent. of protein and 14 per cent. carbohydrate and the human system still converts 58 per cent. of protein into carbohydrates.

One of the most noted of the faddists who warn us against the use of protein and starch advocates the use of whole wheat flour and thus swallows himself. Whole wheat flour is chiefly starch but it also contains about 13.8 per cent. of protein, while wheat germ, similarly advocated, contains about equal quantities of protein and starch.

It is to remarkable how the advocates of nonsense continue to promote faddism and with much success even among the more enlightened members of the community. The glibly portion of the public are much rendered to accept the advice of the charlatan than they are to believe that of medically-trained opinion. In consequence they and their families are the sufferers.

Mother Nature knows more about food combinations than any fastidist. There is not the slightest ground for believing that a food combination of proteins, starches and carbohydrates is proper proportions, will do any injury to the user. As a matter of fact the best diets are combinations of these food elements and if we wish to gain the highest benefits from our foods, the diet must be balanced in these elements as these elements are concerned. The public should turn a deaf ear to the oft-repeated nonsense about proteins and starches.

Street Mendicants

Beggars In London Cause Annoyance To Merchants

There has recently been a noticeable increase in the numbers of street musicians stopping outside shops in Bond street. These characters are in many respects a public nuisance. Their activities have not only left visitors from overseas with an unfavorable impression of the metropolis but have caused a loss of trade to shopkeepers.

A wealthy customer of some of the best known shops in Bond street and its tributaries recently made it known that she had ceased to visit these shops because she was so frequently pestered by street musicians and beggars. It was estimated that she spent $750 a year in the shops.

Some success in dealing with street musicians and beggars has been achieved in Grosvenor street by the combined efforts of shopkeepers. There it was decided some months ago that any street musician or beggar stopping outside any premises should be told immediately to move on. This action, taken by all the traders in Grosvenor street, has made it a most unpopular street with wandering musicians and beggars—London Times.

The most popular horse for harnessing to stage coaches was the percheron, which contained Flemish blood mixed with the Arab. It is still widely used for draught purposes in the Argentine and the United States.

STAN PATTON ORCHESTRA

Stan Patton, creator of "Musical Patterns by Patton," which have delighted thousands of coast dancers and CBC radio listeners, brings his distinctively-styled dance orchestra here on June 12th for a one-night appearance in the course of a tour of Western Canadian provinces.

Patton appears here under the sponsorship of Columbus Club and of Mart Kenney, conductor of the famous "Western Gentlemen." The two Vancouver maestros have been friends for a number of years, as Patton's band has taken over summer engagements in the Spanish Grill of Hotel Vancouver for the past three seasons, while Kenney and his men fulfilled seasonal contracts in Toronto.

Now just 24, Patton is regarded as one of Canada's ablest young leaders and arrangers. A lover of intricate and entertaining effects in rhythms, Patton scorns "stock" arrangements and writes distinctive scores for all his numbers with the aid of Ernie Buchanan, his pianist.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

GET AN IDEA FIRST

Bedtime—and an excellent "story-telling" snap. Learn to build your pictures around a central idea.

BEFORE you snap a picture, do you have in your mind a clear idea of what you want the picture to "say"?

This is important, because every picture needs a central "picture idea" to give it life and meaning. Especially, every picture with persons in it needs some sort of action (or activity) to give it interest.

By "action" I don't mean rapid motion, but merely that the person pictured should be doing something.

For example, suppose you have a small daughter, and every now and then you want a new picture of her. Well, don't just get her to stand in the corner of the backyard, and look at the camera while you snap. Relate the picture to her personal life, her daily activities. Look at these ideas:

A picture of her climbing out of bed in the morning (you can take it at night, really). A snap of her yawning and stretching, in pajamas. Rubbing sleepy eyes. Talking to her dolls. Playing house. Poring over picture books. Leaving for kindergarten. Helping Mother in the kitchen. Riding a tricycle or scooter. Munching a slice of buttered bread. Being tucked into bed at night. Sleeping soundly with a doll or teddy bear or toy dog.

In all these, she is doing something. And, she will help you get your pictures, if you make a game of it, and suggest that she "play like" she is doing this or that. Indeed, this is a good way to entertain her on a dull day or evening.

It's a good picture method. Start with a clear idea, and make the picture to fit it. When one picture isn't enough, snap a series. Make each picture "say something"—and note how they gain in life and appeal.

THE JUNK MAN BUSINESS—OR WHO GETS THE PROMISED $25

Hon. E. C. Manning has declared: "The record of the government speaks for itself," among those who bear witness to the truth of the honorable gentleman's statement is our old acquaintance, the junk man, who dropped in the other day.

After conducting our small private affairs, he announced: "Well, I always like a little chat. And, oh, by the way, 'Well,' we replied, 'what with cedes, licenses, and one thing after another your friend Aberhart is always starting, we'd say it's bad.'"

"You know I'm not Aberhart," was the retort. "All I say, he's a smart man. Any guy who can put over people what he has and get what he's got, he's a smart man." There was a note of admiration, as of one artist for another, in the junk man's tone, but he continued. "You talk about licenses! I'll show you something." Fumbling in his wallet he extracted a whole flock of licenses, from among which he produced a provincial license, priced at $25. "Ten years I have been in business," he protested, "nine years I pay nothing to buy junk, now $25." "Perhaps you buy junk, license $25. And this Aberhart license no good in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge; only in country. Then, if municipal, they say no; I can't buy there." He went on. "See that truck out there? Well, for same kind of truck I used to pay $62.50 license now $27." "Another $25 for Aberhart," we remarked.

"I tell you, Mister," said the junk man, "these licenses, taxes, they just spoiling business! Why now I go ask for truck license, they ask 25c to weigh him. And taxes! In Calgary I have house I pay $120 taxes on. I tell you, Mister, I can't pay what things is worth! I gotta live, ain't I?" "Sure," we answered, but let's figure up your straight license and tax bill."

"Alright, alright, and I'll tell you, it's a plenty," was the remark, and then added, "don't forget that extra dollar a year for my driver's license, what used to be fifty cents for all the time!"

So we figured the bill, and the statements came out like this:

Licenses	$143.00
Taxes	120.00
Total	263.00

And, as Mr. Manning so truly says, the record speaks for itself. — Della Times.

TO THEIR MOST

GRACIOUS MAJESTIES

The United Church of Canada, representing a constituency of over two million souls, extends a most cordial greeting and welcome to our King and Queen, on the occasion of their first Canadian visit. We deeply appreciate their concern about our welfare, of which we have had abundant evidence in the past, and which now receives its crowning proof in their personal visit to our shores.

Our people are naturally proud of their British connection. Our life has been greatly enriched by British traditions. We appreciate and enjoy our British institutions, which we have resolved to maintain. Again we offer our love and pledge our loyalty to Their Gracious Majesties, King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth, our beloved King and Queen, assuring them that we share their concern about the welfare of the whole Commonwealth of Nations and support them in their heroic efforts to establish good will and peace among men. We will continue to pray that their visit to our land, and to the land of our good neighbors, may be both pleasant and profitable and that a kindly Providence may grant them journeying mercies and a safe return.

STREAMLINERS ARE BIG MONEY MAKERS

Streamlined trains are so profitable that they are paying their entire cost "in a few months," says an article in "Railway Age."

Up to August 31st, 1938, the total revenues of the Hiawatha and its extra sections amounted to $4,371,450.

Expenses, including interest and depreciation, totalled $1,442,015, leaving net earnings of $2,929,435.

"In contrast," the article points out, "the cost of the two locomotives and 18 cars was $394,946."

In other words, the train has already paid back more than three times its total cost.

compellingly magnificent vistas of the Valley of the Bow and the sweeping snow-capped ramparts of Sulphur Mountain, Mount Rundle and the Fairholme Range. Present plans provide for the arrival of Their Majesties at Banff in the evening of May 28th; a day of rest and enjoyment on May 29th and their departure during the mid-morning of May 30th. During their stay they will enjoy the drive to beautiful Lake Louise, appropriately named after Princess Louise, wife of the Marquis of Lorne, sometime Governor-General of Canada, and a daughter of Queen Victoria. They will make their headquarters at the Banff Springs Hotel which will be opened earlier this season exclusively for use of the Royal party. The picture lay-out shows the hotel in its magnificent mountain setting and glimpses of a few of the spacious rooms which lend comfort and charm to the Royal Suite.

TEN COMMANDMENTS
FOR PARENTS

How to handle children has been a problem since the beginning of time, and the Chicago Daily News recently offered a prize for the best set of ten commandments. Here is the winning set:

Thou shalt not speak unto thy small offspring saying that if he tells lies the policeman will come and carry him off.

Thou shalt not rub it in on the kids about thy own youthful virtues in things wherein they are having trouble making the grade.

Thou shalt not quarrel with the spouse of thy bosom in the presence of thy children.

When neighboring swains and damsels drive into thy courtyard in their Henryford and call upon thy daughter to go places and do things, thou shalt not come out in thy Now-Mary-mind-what-I-told-you manner, for he who faces a parental crisis only when it arrives is sunk.

Thou shalt not look up from thy green peas to order thy son to eat his spinach.

Thou shalt not barge onto the dance floor and haul thy daughter home by the hair of the head for being late, lest thou humiliate her before her friends and cause her subconscious self to mutter curses upon thee.

Thou shalt not do all the work and the odd jobs around the house thyself lest thy child lose the fun and the benefits thereof.

Thou shalt not allow a major war to develop over the use of the family gas chariot, but seek diligently the ways of peace and appeasement and share responsibility for the common and larger good.

Thou shalt not do ought for thy child that he can do for himself, nor without expect the impossible.

Thou shalt not set thy children's teeth on edge against the higher and the finer things, for life will not hold him guiltless who grubs in the muck and fails to look ahead at the stars.—Ex.

Treated Like A Minister

The story is told about an old friend who chanced to meet Woodrow Wilson in England. He had not seen Mr. Wilson for many years.

"You look very much like a minister," said the friend. "Have you ever been taken for one?"

"No," replied Mr. Wilson, "but I've been treated like one."

"That's interesting!"

"Yes, I had a job once," replied the educator, "where I waited six months for my salary."

CRANBROOK-LETHBRIDGE
MAP SHEET ISSUED

The Department of Mines and Resources, Ottawa, advises that its hydrographic and map service is engaged in the preparation for aeronautical purposes of a new series of eight-mile maps of areas across the Dominion. One of the series, the Cranbrook-Lethbridge map just issued, covers an area extending from latitude 48 degrees to latitude 50 degrees, one half of which is in the United States. The map shows all topographical features important as land marks from the air, and as much other similar information as the scale of the map will permit without making it too confused for easy reading by the pilots.

The outstanding physical feature of the region is the Rocky Mountains, the main continental divide. The crest of this range in Canada forms the boundary between Alberta and British Columbia. This boundary has been surveyed, and a series of map sheets is available showing it in detail.

Part of three different watersheds are shown on the new map, namely, that drained by the Kootenay river, which rises far to the north, loops easterly into the United States, and then returns to Canada, where it joins the Columbia river on its way to the Pacific ocean; by the Oldman river, a tributary of the South Saskatchewan river, the waters of which eventually reach Hudson Bay, and by the Milk river, in Alberta, a tributary of the Missouri river. By this it will be noted that a part of Alberta is included in the Mississippi watershed.

Copies of the Cranbrook-Lethbridge map may be obtained from the Hydrographic and Map Service, Department of Mines and Resources, Ottawa, at 25 cents a copy.

There are two kinds of wood that make a match: he world and she world.

Hotel operators in Vancouver and vicinity are concerned at the low prices announced for the new Hotel Vancouver, and protests have been made to the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways. The minimum rates at the new hotel have been set at $3 per day for single room, $4.50 for double room and $5 for twin beds. Minimum rates at the old Hotel Vancouver are $4 per day in the winter and $5 in the summer months.

ROYAL VISIT MICROPHONES

With the construction of a new type of outdoor microphone, the engineering department of the CBC has overcome one of its major obstacles in connection with an uninterrupted broadcast account of the Royal visit. This new microphone, which can be used in all kinds of weather, is equipped with a special wind-resisting device for the elimination of weather and other extraneous sounds. Seen in the inset, the microphone is decorated with the Royal insignia and will be used whenever Their Majesties engage in out-of-doors broadcasting. The two gold-plated microphones, seen in position on the table, will be used whenever His Majesty the King speaks from an indoor location, such as on Empire Day, May 24th, when radio listeners throughout the British Commonwealth of Nations heard His Majesty speaking from Winnipeg.

ROADS FIT FOR THE KING, HA! HA!

Only a couple of weeks ago, Abie remarked that our Alberta highways were fit for the King. For his benefit we might state that there are many ruts in the Crow highway between Pincher and Crows' Nest sufficiently deep to clip the wheel off a car if travelling at a fast rate of speed, and one rut in particular, near Glacier Creek, in which a car actually drops to the housing or axle. Let him bring his limousine down here for a work out, then invite the King to see a condition scarcely believable, but a fact. Also, that section of the highway from Carbondale west to Crows' Nest has not been touched since last year, and it is time some little attention was paid to it. In its present condition it can cause tourists to retrace their tracks and look for more pleasant thoroughfares; but an effort at improvement right now might prove to be a vote getter.

John Kannawin, of Winnipeg; Jack Peach, of Vancouver; Pat Freeman, of Calgary, and Robert Anderson, of Ottawa, are the Westerners or former Westerners in the above group of CBC announcers and production men assigned to broadcast all the major ceremonies and celebrations during the visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen to Canada. Chosen following auditions held in various cities, these men will be heard in broadcasts from 23 key points in Canada's nine provinces, as the King and Queen travel across the Dominion from Halifax to Victoria. Special training, including lectures by naval and military authorities and others conversant with the technical terms and formalities concerning the Royal visit, has been given to all CBC men participating in these broadcasts. From left to right, the broadcasters are, top row: Gerry Wilmot, Montreal; Fernand Leclerc, Montreal; William J. O'Reilly, Toronto; H. Eooney Pelletier, Montreal; Jack Peach, Vancouver; middle row: Edward Briggs, Halifax; T. O. Wiklund, Toronto; R. T. Bowman, Toronto; Reld Forsee, Toronto; bottom row: Patrick Freeman, Calgary; Herbert Walzer, Toronto; Robert Anderson, Ottawa, and John Kannawin, Winnipeg.

PICTURE ARRANGEMENT

A simple arrangement, but a good one, partly because the same curved line is repeated in the boys' backs and the back of the chair. This gives rhythm to the picture.

MANY snapshoters read about picture composition, and decide it is something subtle and "arty," and pretty much of a puzzle. But it needn't be a puzzle, at all. Composition is simply pleasing arrangement.

The woman who arranges flowers in a bowl, or furniture in a room, is "composing" in much the same way as an artist composes a picture. Both are seeking balance, harmony, and an attractive arrangement that appeals to the eye.

Picture composition can be very subtle, but it does not have to be. As a rule, the simpler the arrangement, the more effective it is.

Clearness is the first need of an effective picture arrangement. One way to obtain this is to seek contrast. For instance, if a gray object is pictured against a gray background, the two tend to "run together." But if a gray object is pictured against a white background, with lights so arranged that it casts a black shadow on the white background, there is good contrast, and the object "stands out." A good example of contrast would be a light-haired person pictured against a background of deep shadow.

Another thing is to avoid confusing lines that "lead out" of the pic-

THE ROYAL WAY

Oh, did you hear the shouting as the King came by?
And did you feel them thrilling to the Queen?
Sure, Nine Provinces were stirring as the Union Jacks did fly;
It's the greatest sight our country's ever seen.

Oh, did you sense the meaning of the man behind the throne,
Who does his Kingly duty with such skill?

Oh, do you love the smile of her whose happy heart has shown -
That her Queenly life is guided by God's will?

Oh, do you pray for blessings on your Sovereigns' visit here,
As our Maple Leaf adorns their English Rose?
Oh, do you see the Empire as one family most dear,
In whose veins a common blood-stream strongly flows?

Thank God for the great privilege of living in this land,

Where Peace and Freedom hold their Righteous sway.

Let's measure up to Canada—the country God has planned,
And learn, like Kings, to live the Royal Way. —M.H.C.

"I'm sorry," said the maiden kindly but firmly, "but I will not marry you!"

So the fellow went out west and, after sixty-two years, three months, four days, eighteen hours and fifty-nine minutes, he became suddenly ill and died.

University Objectives

Quality rather than quantity should be the objective of the universities of the country.

At all times it is of greater importance to the nation that a few brilliant students capable of exercising leadership be graduated from the institutions of higher learning than a large number with mediocre attainments and of average capacity.

It is of still greater importance in times of national and international stress, like the present, when unemployment threatens the foundations of democracy from within and when freedom and liberty are endangered by external forces.

Under such conditions the quality of leadership cannot be too high and it is not too much to expect that the universities and the product of the universities be capable of giving the guidance which the people of the country expect in their efforts to solve these pressing problems.

It is an oft heard complaint that governments in the democratic countries are not effectively tackling the mass problems but are content to reflect the ever changing confusion of mass opinion with an eye on the target of political expedience, instead of mapping out a definite program with a definite objective, based on historically tested principles, and adhering to it.

If such an indictment is well founded the importance of the work ahead of the universities in turning out students who will be capable of giving sound leadership and of attacking problems as they arise with wisdom and clear perspective, plus the character and grit necessary to prevent defection from the direct path to the goal by every breeze that blows, can hardly be exaggerated.

The Main Objective

When it is remembered that the universities draw on the public purse for considerable sums annually for partial subsistence, the people have a right to expect much of these institutions. They have a right to expect these institutions to select the raw materials with the utmost care to ensure a high quality finished product. They have a right to expect to receive a high quality finished product. They have a right to expect the curriculum to be geared up to the level of such an objective. They have a right to demand that the teaching staff be selected with high ideals in view.

It is true that in recent years some steps have been taken by the Western universities to meet the demand for quality in the student body. This has been done by stiffening, to some extent, educational requirements as entry qualifications and by imposing additional restrictions governing the process of weeding out the unfit and the unproficient during tenure.

It is also true that economic conditions during the past few years have contributed to the process of reducing the number of students passing through and graduating from Western universities, but this factor, of itself, has not necessarily been responsible for advancing the quality of the student body at the expense of quantity.

Since fewer can find the necessary means to send their progeny to the universities during periods of financial stress, the trend might be expected to be in the other direction on that very account. It leaves the doors of the universities open only to a smaller number whose parents can afford to send them. In some cases a percentage goes because it is the "smart thing to do," because a parchment is expected to yield dividends in social advantages or simply because a university education is expected to pave the way for contacts which may be useful subsequently in business.

When times are prosperous it is difficult for the offspring of the comparatively poor to secure a university education, no matter how high may be their attainments, no matter how well equipped mentally they may be to make the most of the opportunities afforded. When times are hard, the difficulties in the way of educational advancement for such students are multiplied ten fold or their opportunities are entirely obliterated, except for the very small number for whom scholarships are available. Thus, the country loses potential services which might have been of inestimable value.

Based On Scholarship

Taking a long range view of the problems of the universities, of the need of the country for a body of young men and women in training for future leadership and other related factors, it would appear to be a paying proposition to make wider provision for a greater number of scholarships tenable at the universities, from public funds, provided sufficient funds are not available from private sources.

Coupled with the provision of more public scholarships a further tightening of entrance requirements might well be made as well as the imposition of higher progressive qualifications during the period of studentship.

The whole objective of such changes as might be made would be, of course, to make university education available to an increasing percentage of those who could reap the greatest benefit therefrom, not only for themselves but for the country at large, and to a declining proportion of those who would make use of such advantages for other and less worthy purposes.

Five Years' Work

True Relief Map of Canada Has Been Completed

Following five years' work, a true relief map of Canada, weighing 1½ tons and standing 5½ feet high with a floor radius of 11 feet, has been completed by members of the topographical survey in the Mines and Resources Department at Ottawa.

Lakes, rivers and oceans surrounding the Dominion are shown in blue, against sand colored earth. Glaciers are marked by broken glass and transcontinental railways are outlined in red in the large map which illustrates the broad physical features of Canada in exact proportion to the actual curvature of the earth. Relief has been exaggerated 10 times to give sufficient contrast between the areas of little relief and the mountainous terrain.

The map is made up of 45 sections, each of which was built of cardboard from the contour of 10 degree projection sheets. The completed section was shelled, waxed and moulded in plaster from which the final casting was produced. The set as a whole is panelled in mahogany and illuminated by cross lighting to bring out the finer points of relief.

What Makes Us Go

Professor Thinks Gelatin Mixture Triples A Man's Energy

Professor George B. Ray, head of the department of physiology of Long Island College of Medicine, announces plain gelatin mixed with a little orange juice or water will double or triple a man's energy. This is great news for hikers, marchers, marathon dancers and those who like to walk around the reservoir in Central Park every morning and then have a nap at the office. Perhaps this is a considerable contribution to science if, Dr. Ray suggests, it's the glycine in the gelatin that does the trick. We wouldn't know, offhand.

Anyway, Dr. Ray and the Long Island College of Medicine are entitled to due credit in the long effort to find out what makes us go.

And a good deal of credit, we think, ought to go to those devoted investigators who swallowed their quarters or was it liters of gelatin soup day after day and then pedaled away on stationary bicycles for hours on end to see whether the gelatin made any difference. Research, it seems, is not altogether brain work. —New York Post.

Exile From Austria

Archduke Franz Joseph Has Job And Is Quite Happy

An exiled Hapsburg who does not mean for the good old Imperial Austria is Archduke Franz Joseph, who has got himself a job. The archduke, who is an uncle of Otto, claimant to the Austrian throne, was in London recently from Cannes on a business visit. His job is to promote tourist traffic. Recently he has been publicising Britain in India and Egypt. Archduke Franz Joseph, who has the title of a Prince of Bourbon, is married to a beautiful Viennese Baroness. She shares her husband's passion for travelling and often accompanies him in his aeroplane. He is the pilot, she the wireless operator. Like him she speaks six languages including English, which they both learned during their stay in England last year. They are exiles from Austria. The Archduke has not been in Austria since 1918. Most of his time has been spent in Holland, England, France and Spain. On his mother's side he is related to the Spanish royal family, and he became a Spanish citizen in 1927. —London Daily Sketch.

Says Teeth And Tonsils Not As Common A Source Of Infection As Believed

A warning against disease treatments by "tooth and tonsil jerkers" was issued before the 90th annual meeting of the American Medical Association.

Contrary to popular and medical opinion the teeth and tonsils are not as common a source as is believed of infection causing rheumatism, arthritis and similar diseases, Dr. Robert Heimann and Dr. Paul Havens declared.

Frequently tonsil and tooth infections disappear when a person with a general infection improves. Dr. Heimann added, indicating that the mouth and throat symptoms are a result, rather than a cause, of such conditions.

Woman Juror Had Open Mind On Capital Punishment

"The Judge was about to hear an action in the High Court when a woman juror rose and requested exemption from service on a plea that she was a non-believer in capital punishment."

"But this is a civil action," the Judge explained, "and has nothing whatever to do with capital punishment. It is brought by a woman who gave her husband two hundred pounds to buy her a fur coat. The husband, instead of buying the coat, lost the money gambling, and now his wife is suing him for the return of her two hundred pounds."

"Oh, indeed, is that it?" replied the juror relieved. "Then I've no objection to serving." She pondered a moment and then added thoughtfully: "And, perhaps, after all, I was wrong about capital punishment." —Edinburgh Scotsman.

An Honest Man

Justices Handed Out To Man Who Impressed The Court

Mr. James Dunbar, of Huron County, is a poor man and with a minimum of education. Yet he is possessed of an advantage that money cannot buy nor education acquire. He is honest.

This characteristic stood Mr. Dunbar in good stead in a Goderich court when he attempted to break his uncle's will. The story briefly is that, in 1913, the uncle made a will bequeathing his farm to another nephew. Then 23 years ago, Mr. Dunbar went to live with his uncle on the promise that the farm would come to him. He took with him his life's savings, $12,000, worked without pay since then, and spent his savings. The uncle evidently intended to make over the will, but failed to do so.

Breaking a will is no easy thing to do. But Mr. Dunbar did it. How? By convincing Mr. Justice Godfrey of his absolute honesty; that the uncle had intended changing the will. Furthermore, he had 24 neighbors to testify to his honesty.

Mr. Justice Godfrey said he had never been more impressed by any man than by this 67-year-old weather-beaten farmer, dressed in a 34-year-old suit, and without money or education. It is a high tribute. —Windsor Star.

Salt and pepper to taste.

Place the crushed Shredded Wheat Biscuits and the parsley in a mixing bowl. Heat the butter to bubbling in a frying pan, add the diced celery and onion, and cook gently until the onion is soft and yellow. If mushrooms are included, they may also be sautéed in the butter mixture. Stir the rice into the sautéed onion and celery mixture, then add to the Shredded Wheat. Add the oysters (if included) poultry seasoning, and stock from the giblets. Season to taste with salt and pepper, and mix thoroughly. Stuff the bird or joint and proceed with the roasting.

CHEESE DROP BISCUITS

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening and cheese. Add milk gradually, stirring until soft dough is formed. Drop from teaspoon on ungreased baking sheet. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes 15 biscuits.

Few markets are as unusual as the onion market of Bern, Switzerland. It is held once a year on a Monday in the second half of November, and dates back to the Middle Ages.

ARMS USELESS ON A WET DAY

Rheumatic Pains Relieved By Kruschen

Here is a noteworthy instance of the manner in which damp weather can affect the joints of one who is subject to rheumatic pains.

"I had been suffering from rheumatism very badly," a man writes, "and had such pains in my joints that I could hardly bear it on a wet day especially. It pained me terribly to use my arms, and I was hardly able to work. I tried two different remedies, but I was still as bad after the treatment."

"Then I was told to try Kruschen Salts, which quickly brought relief. So of course I have kept on with it, and I am now much better and have never felt so fit for years. I used to feel so miserable and sluggish, but now it is a pleasure to be able to work." —S.B.

The pains and stiffness of rheumatism are caused by uric acid crystals in the muscles and joints. The numerous salts in Kruschen assist in stimulating the internal organs to healthy, regular activity and help them to eliminate excess uric acid.

Great War Cripple Spent Years Looking At Building

Alfred Henry Loader Blake, a helpless war cripple, spent most of his waking life after 1916 at the window of his home in Biddlewade, England. He used to draw sketches of St. Andrew's Church opposite. That, and the street, were almost all he could see.

He was attended by his housekeeper, Miss Scarrow, and a nurse, Mrs. Miller.

Whenever a blind man passed in the street he would send out a gift, in money or in kind.

Recently the will of Mr. Blake, who died in January, aged 54, was published.

He left £1,000, from his £5,300 estate to help repair the fabric of St. Andrew's church.

Grey-haired Miss Scarrow said: "Mr. Blake was a kindhearted man naturally, but his suffering in the war made him more so."

His ambition had been to become an architect, but the war ended all that. He spent many hours drawing and planning dream cottages and churches.

Iceland shipped products valued at $1,200,000 to the U.S. in 1938.

KING'S VISIT TO U. S. TO CEMENT TIES OF FRIENDSHIP

Washington.—Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador to the United States, held the first press conference in his life to tell correspondents the sole political purpose of the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to the United States was "to improve the ties of friendship with your country."

Sir Ronald, facing about 30 reporters, said the royal visit had primarily been arranged as a visit to Canada and "the visit to the United States was not at the fore at that time in the minds of the King and Queen. But once the visit was arranged to Canada, its extension to the United States was the most natural thing in the world."

"The purpose of the visit here is not primarily political, although it is perfectly obvious that when the King visits a foreign country part of his purpose is to improve the ties of friendship as far as he possibly can. There is no more political purpose in the visit than that."

Answering a question, he said it was "inconceivable that the King would not have conversations with Secretary (of state) Hull during his visit."

It was assumed the ambassador meant that in the natural course of events His Majesty would have an informal chat with the secretary of state, senior member of the Roosevelt cabinet.

There will be no press conference of any sort by the King, he said. When a correspondent suggested that perhaps His Majesty might like to hold one, Sir Ronald replied, "I don't think so."

He said the King would not make any speeches here but would pronounce a short toast at the state dinner at the White House.

Asked whether American men should bow from the waist in meeting the King, Sir Ronald replied:

"I think they might do what I do when I meet the president. I behave in a suitable and respectful manner. I would certainly give a bow. Whether it comes from my waist or not, I don't know."

Army Gunners Killed

Second Explosion In Woolwich Arsenal In Two Days

London.—The war office announced five army gunners were killed and six injured in an explosion at Woolwich arsenal, the second in two days.

The explosion occurred during the loading of a 3.7-inch anti-aircraft gun. An investigation was begun. The victims, all connected with the Woolwich scientific military school, were standing near a gun at the stop-buts of the artillery range when the blast occurred.

The dead: Battery Sergeant-Major H. H. Constantine, Staff Sergeant E. R. Brown, Gunners C. Shepherd, W. Griffiths, and J. Barron, of Breckley Gardens, Eatham.

Quartermaster-Sergeant P. McGill was injured seriously. Gunner P. W. Smith and men named Hartwell and Samuels also were injured.

Two persons were killed and two injured in an explosion at the Woolwich arsenal's cartridge shop.

Keep Out Of War

Premier Mussolini Would Settle Differences In Peaceful Way

Rome.—Adolf Hitler must settle his differences with Poland without going to war if he wishes any agreements with Italy. A high diplomatic source said that Premier Mussolini has entered into a military agreement with Hitler only on that condition.

The same source said Hitler agreed and expressed confidence that the Polish dispute as well as the French-Italian quarrel could be settled without hostilities.

Foreign diplomats apparently have received assurances that Italy and Germany do not intend to go to war over their respective French and Polish claims.

The military pact provides for automatic military assistance if either country is engaged in either defensive or offensive hostilities, high sources said. Hitherto, the pact had been envisaged as applicable only if one country or the other was attacked.

Purging Reich Army

Paris.—Chancellor Hitler and Field Marshal Goering continue "purging" the reich army high command of those officers who oppose their "lightning war" strategy, with five prominent commanders dismissed in the past six weeks.

THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN

WELCOME TO THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN

The text of the address of welcome to Their Majesties spoken by Prime Minister King at the Dominion government luncheon reads in part:

May it please Your Majesty: On behalf of the Canadian people, I respectfully extend to Your Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen a royal welcome to "Your Dominion of Canada."

We are deeply conscious of the signal honor of being the first of the overseas nations of the commonwealth to be visited by the reigning sovereign, and of having the high privilege of welcoming in person, Our King and Queen. We are proud indeed to feel that, in the person of Your Majesty, we have among us, not the symbol, but the living presence of the head of the whole empire.

Three and a third centuries ago, unknown, unheralded and unwelcome, small craft crossed the then uncharted seas and sailed up the St. Lawrence to where this morning Your Majesty set foot on Canadian soil. Here, these early adventurers planted the Fleur de Lys of France and raised the cross of Christianity. That day was the birthday of Canada. Since then, these heights have witnessed other scenes alike heroic and historic. . . .

To-day, as never before, the throne has become the centre of our national life.

Under the shadow of the great rock of Quebec, there has passed, in the course of years, a continuous stream of men and women, seeking and finding new homes and new opportunities in this favored land.

We rejoice in the thought that, for a time, our King and Queen will follow the path of those adventurers and pioneers. Your Majesties will discover not only—as they did—forests, prairies, and mountains but thriving villages, towns and cities, all eager to extend their welcome. We hope there may be opportunity as well for Your Majesties to see and to enjoy something of the natural beauty of Canada's many rivers and lakes, its vast spaces, its clear skies and golden sunshine, its national parks, its quiet countryside and its peaceful homes.

We are not unmindful of the sacrifices involved in your long and arduous journey over land and sea, and in parting for the time being with your children—those cherished children of the Empire, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose. May the sincerity and warmth of our welcome be some compensation to you during this temporary separation.

Your Majesties will find other children in this land longing to press around you, children who in turn will hand on to a future generation the memory of a great moment in their lives. Here, too, you will be in the heart of a family which is your own; a family of men and women of varied stock and race and thought, who, in free association with other members of the commonwealth, but equally in their own way, are working out their national destiny.

We would have Your Majesties feel that, in coming from the old land to the new, you have but left one home to come to another; that we are all of one household. Free institutions and democratic ideals are as dear to the hearts of your people in Canada as to the people in any other part of the Empire. We regard their preservation and perpetuation as the common concern of all.

May I, in conclusion, be permitted to say that the warmth of the welcome Your Majesties will everywhere receive is bound up in a very special way with the admiration that all Canadians feel for the qualities of heart and character which you possess—for what you are in yourselves. In your daily lives we see exemplified the things we value most—faith in God, concern for human well-being, consecration to the public service, delight in the simple joys of home and family life. Greater than our sense of splendor of your state is our affection for two young people who bear, in a high spirit, a responsibility unparalleled in the world.

The King replied: Mr. Prime Minister: I am deeply moved by your words of welcome to the Queen and myself on behalf of the Canadian people.

I recognize that this moment is historic. It is the first time that a British King has crossed the Atlantic. I stand to-day on the soil of North America. Here, in the past two centuries, through loss and through gain, the British commonwealth of nations has been largely moulded into its present form.

This is also the first visit of the sovereign to one of his overseas dominions. It is fitting that it should be to the senior Dominion of the crown. I am particularly pleased that, on the day of my arrival in Canada, I should have the pleasure of meeting not only the ministers, but all the members of my privy council for Canada.

You, in Canada, have already fulfilled part of the biblical promise and obtained Dominion from sea to sea. You are now engaged in fulfilling the latter part of that promise in consolidating government from the river to the ends of the earth, from the Saint Lawrence to the Arctic snows.

The Queen and I are looking forward, with anticipation too great for expression, to seeing all we possibly can of this vast country. Particularly do we welcome the opportunity of greeting the men and women who are its strength and stay, and of seeing something of the younger generation so soon to become the guardians of its future.

Shows Consideration

King and Queen Will Not Accept Gifts During Tour

Quebec.—One more evidence of the King's consideration for his subjects was given in a message from His Majesty to Dominion government officials in charge of the royal tour. They were told that while it was customary for everyone to remain standing while the King was speaking, he desired that everyone attending the Dominion government luncheon should sit entirely at ease throughout his speech.

It was also stressed that the prevailing custom of members of the royal family to decline gifts for themselves and the little princesses would be strictly adhered to on the Dominion-wide tour of Their Majesties.

For Use Of Railways

Berlin.—While the German press continued to arouse Poland, the government came quietly to one amicable understanding with Germany's eastern neighbor. Germany paid a 12,500,000 zloty ($2,375,000) debt for use of Polish railways across the Polish corridor in railway and medical supplies, and the Polish government accepted the payment.

DOMINION CARILLONEUR AT THE KEYBOARD

Reception Was Good

British Radio Audience Hears Broadcast Of Sovereigns' Arrival In Canada.

London.—The British radio audience heard a step-by-step description of the sovereigns' arrival in Canada in a British Broadcasting Corporation program broadcast over empire wave-lengths.

Reception of the descriptions sent by various announcers, including an English observer sent to Quebec by the BBC, was good, apart from occasional atmospheric interference. Announcement that the King and Queen had gone ashore after their prolonged voyage reached here at 3:37 p.m. The roar of guns saluting the King and Queen as they set foot on Canadian soil was followed by a detailed description of the royal procession through the streets of Quebec.

Immigration Commissioner Dies

Winnipeg.—Former Dominion commissioner of immigration and well-known for his newspaper work in eastern Canada, John Bruce Walker, 79, died here following a lengthy illness. Mr. Walker was born in Troon, Scotland. He came to Canada in 1881 and joined the staff of the Toronto Globe. He retired in 1929.

JEWS STAGE RIOT IN PALESTINE OVER CHANGE IN POLICY

Jerusalem.—British police fired into a crowd of Jewish youths rioting at Tel Aviv against the newly announced British policy governing Palestine, and wounded several of them.

A crowd of more than 5,000 Jewish youths, after taking an oath to fight for Jewish independence, had marched to the British government district offices. Raising the Zionist flag, they forced their way into the building, broke up furniture and set fire to desks and tables.

Police first fired into the air then, as the disorders continued, they shot into the crowd. Demonstrations at Tel Aviv, which is an all-Jewish city, continued as midnight approached.

The government immigration department headquarters was damaged badly by an explosion later. No casualties resulted.

Earlier, sabotage had delayed the British government's attempt to relay a summary of its white paper, announcing the new plan to create in Palestine an Arab-dominated state over the radio.

Lines between the radio transmitting station at Ramallah and the Jerusalem studio were cut just as it began the broadcast. English and Arab announcers were rushed to Ramallah, 15 miles from Jerusalem, in an armored car under heavy guard, however, and the broadcast was completed there.

In Jerusalem 300 youths marched through the streets to the Jewish Agency building where cries were heard of "Down with Chamberlain," "Down with MacDonald and Halifax," "Long live the Jewish state."

At Haifa a copy of the white paper was burned in a symbolic demonstration. The participants dispersed quietly after they pledged to "fight to the last" against execution of the new policy.

Jewish nationalist institutions opened offices throughout the country where Jews between the ages of 16 and 35 might register for "service in the Jewish cause."

British troops and police were under orders to "stand to" in anticipation of possible further disorders.

Householders, anticipating a long strike, depleted the stocks of grocery stores and markets.

Arabs in Jaffa, fearing the reaction of the neighboring all-Jewish city of Tel Aviv, asked police to place a guard between the two cities.

Most members of the Arab supreme committee were meeting in Beirut, across the Syrian border, to decide what action Arabs will take. They listened to Djemal el Husseini, head of the Arab delegation to the London conference on Palestine, express belief that the new British policy probably would not offer "sufficient guarantees for realization of Arab aspirations."

Arab extremists set fire to a Jewish passenger bus in a main street of Haifa, burning a Jewish passenger.

Military authorities kept their soldiers out of Tel Aviv, except when on duty, to avoid friction with the populace.

Meanwhile Arabs here learned that Haj Amin el Husseini, grand mufti of Jerusalem, must remain an exile in Syria in spite of the new British policy.

ITALIAN-GERMAN PRESSURE SEEN IN AUTONOMY MOVES

Budapest.—Anti-Romanian demonstrations are taking place throughout Bulgaria. They followed a statement by the German minister in Sofia that "we are always thinking of Bulgaria's revisionist claims."

A sudden turn in the old Croatian campaign for autonomy in Yugoslavia was seen by some observers as a sign of Italian-German pressure on Yugoslavia to tighten her relations with the axis powers. Dr. Vladko Machek, the Croat leader, left Zagreb "for health reasons" just as Yugoslav President Cvetkovic was to arrive with new proposals to settle Croatian autonomy demands.

British United Press says the Warsaw correspondent of the London Daily Herald, quoted frontier reports as describing numerous evidences of unrest in the Czech provinces of Bohemia and Moravia. One report was that a well known Prague lawyer named Sekanina and three former Czech deputies had been arrested and sent to a concentration camp in Germany in connection with the discovery of a plot against the life of Adolf Hitler.

At Valenciennes, France, police disclosed they are holding a German who said he had brought into France copies of German fortifications plans at Berlin and the Saxon town of Koelnbruck. They said he identified himself as Heinrich Rothery, 37, officer in Chancellor Hitler's black-shirt elite guard.

The man, police said, told them he had deserted his regiment because he was dissatisfied with the Nazi regime and wanted to enlist in the French Foreign Legion.

U.S. Replies To Japan

Naval Forces Land To Protect International Settlement

Washington.—The United States refused to grant, for the time being, Japan's demand for increased Japanese representation in the international settlement at Shanghai.

On instructions from the state department, the United States ambassador at Tokyo, Joseph C. Grew, delivered a memorandum to this effect at the Japanese foreign office at about the time American naval forces were landing at another international settlement—at Amoy.

The diplomatic communication answering a Japanese memo of May 3, declared:

"The government of the United States would be ready, as it has been in the past, to become a party to friendly and orderly negotiations properly instituted and conducted regarding any needed revision in the regulations of the international settlement at Shanghai."

"The government of the United States is constrained to point out, however, that conditions in the Shanghai area are, from its viewpoint, so far from normal at the present time that there is totally lacking a basis for a discussion looking toward an orderly settlement of the complicated problems involved which would be reasonably fair to all concerned."

Restrict Activities

British, U.S. And French Forces Protect Amoy's International Settlement

Amoy, China.—Outnumbered exactly three to one by combined British-United States-French forces, a Japanese landing party in Kulangsu, further restricted its activities.

The 42 Japanese bluejackets were concentrated at the Japanese hospital in Kulangsu. They had ceased attempting to patrol streets of the island in Amoy harbor and their search for the slavers of Hung Lik-shih, whose assassination was given as the reason for the landing in Kulangsu, was pursued quietly.

Forty-two French marines were landed from the cruiser Emile Bertin to join parties of the same number of British and American sailors from the cruisers Birmingham and Marblehead put ashore on Kulangsu.

Likes Canadian Plan

Dublin.—The Federation of Irish Manufacturers thinks the plan of assessing import duties used by Canada is the ideal one for Eire. Representatives of the federation have presented a petition to the government asking it to incorporate the plan in the next Irish Finance Act.

Newfoundland fishermen had a look at the most modern in fisheries equipment when they visited the French trawler Vivagel, a vessel equipped with brine freezers to preserve its catch. Clarke, master of the Canadian National liner Lady Drake tossed overboard on October 8th, 1936, when the ship was approximately 260 miles south of Bermuda on a regular West Indies cruise from Boston and Halifax, has been found on the westerly coast of France. The bottle had drifted about 3,900 miles in the thirty months. The hydrographic office found the report useful in its study of ocean currents.

Amid all the babble and empty phrases with which our premier confuses the minds of the people, there is little, if anything, of a constructive nature to reduce taxation or give better service to the people than they received under previous administrations. Expenses have been incurred which have accomplished nothing. They have added to the taxpayers' burden. Make-believe banks have been opened at the public expense, and if the Blaimore branch is a sample of their usefulness, then all that can be said in their favor is that one is reminded of children who gather a few candles and knick-knacks and play shop to amuse themselves. — Coleman Journal.

KING HAS ACTIVE ROLE

His Share In Government Of Country Involves Real Work

The King's part in the government of the country is a very important one, and King George VI takes it very seriously, keeping in close touch with his Ministers.

All State papers go to him as a matter of course. They are sent to him in a little, steel-lined box labelled with a small plate and bearing the words, "The King." No ceremonial.

When the King, having read all the papers on a Government decision, or on some situation on which a decision will have to be taken, wants to see a Minister, all he does is to telephone the Minister to come to the Palace.

Frequently the King rings up a Minister direct (writes "Demos.") I remember the consternation in one Department when, having somewhat casually told a caller to "hang on a minute," an official, equally nonchalantly, asked, "Who's speaking?"

"The King here!" was the casual—but shattering—reply, uttered in a matter-of-fact voice.

The telephone lines between the King's residences and Government departments are fitted with special devices to prevent "tapping," but when matters of vital importance have to be discussed, personal interviews between the King and his Ministers are always arranged.

Informal Notes

A Minister always wears morning clothes when visiting the King. Ministers are shown straight into the King's study and, apart from a bow, there is no ceremony.

The King, producing papers, often carefully sidetracked and annotated, gets down to work at once, and there is a strictly business discussion.

He has no power, under the Constitution, to order the Cabinet to make decisions or take any course, but the King often makes suggestions, which are always considered by the Cabinet.

If he does not like some action by the Government, the King can—and does—send a note to the Prime Minister saying so.

These notes are quite informal. They usually begin, "The King feels (or does not feel) that so-and-so..." They are signed "G.R.I.," never with the full "sign manual," which is reserved for formal documents and personal letters.

Sometimes, the King writes personally to his Ministers, and these letters are nearly always hand-written. More often, he returns papers, with comments written in the two and a half inch margins.

Endless Writing

In the course of the day the King has to sign personally (not with a rubber stamp) some hundreds of papers, almost every day. If you think that is easy, try writing your own name, carefully and clearly, a hundred times.

Service Commissioners, Acts of Parliament, messages to the House of Commons, and scores of other documents have to receive the King's signature.

Technically, the King can refuse Royal Assent to a Bill, and it does not then become an Act of Parliament.

Actually, the only circumstances in which this veto would be used would be when, a Bill having passed all other stages in both Houses of Parliament, the Government wished to withdraw it. The veto has not been used for decades.

The function of the King is to act the part of the "disinterested helper." Whatever Party is in office, he offers friendly and well-informed advice to his Ministers, occasionally applies a discreet spur, or an even more discreet brake.

The Royal Visit

Their Majesties the King and Queen will make about fifty brief personal appearances in Canada during the course of their month's tour of the Dominion and the United States beginning at Quebec May 15.

Their Majesties will travel almost entirely by train, but will use automobiles for a section of the New Brunswick tour and steamers for the trips to Vancouver Island and to Prince Edward Island. They will sail from Halifax June 15.

Travel will be by day as much as possible for the double purpose of permitting more brief public appearances, and of allowing time for greater rest at night than would be possible on a moving train.

The itinerary is the result of careful and detailed study by members of the Government, the special interdepartmental committee handling the tour and the railway authorities. His Majesty the King will deliver addresses at Quebec, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Victoria, Vancouver and Halifax, and they will be broadcast to the Empire. Queen Elizabeth will lay the corner stone of the new Supreme Court building in Ottawa and probably will deliver a short address.

Will Greet Their Majesties

Canada's popular Governor-General, Lord Tweedsmuir, to whom falls the honor of entertaining the Royal Guests during their visit to the Dominion.

His Majesty Has Variety of Titles

"By the Grace of God, of Great Britain, Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India..." So begin the official titles of King George the Sixth.

The King is also Sovereign of the Orders of the Garter, the Thistle, and St. Patrick, the three premier orders of England, Scotland, and Ireland. He is the fount of honor. He can decline to confer honors or decorations, whether or no the name is put before him by the Prime Minister, and can take them away as George V actually did with the British honors once held by the Kaiser and the Emperor Franz Joseph.

Mighty Wardrobe

He could, if he wished, travel incognito as the Baron Killarney, or the Earl of Inverness, or use his Baridic title, Albert of Efrog. He could mystify us by inventing names for himself. He is hardly likely to do so, for in fact as well as in name, his titles already make an overwhelming

High Steward of Windsor and Bailiff Grand Cross of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. Following the rest of the Royal family, he discarded several German titles and decorations he once held, but still holds high honors in Belgium, Denmark, Rumania and other continental countries.

Secret Orders and Rites

In Australia he was made a "digger" by one of the Returned Soldiers' Organizations after an evening when he characteristically set aside a formal engagement to attend a smoking concert run and arranged by ex-soldiers. In New Zealand he became a Maori chief. In all parts of the Empire he has been initiated into secret orders and rites of tribes. By inheritance, he is "Chief of the Golden Tooth" in one East African tribe and "Highest Witch Doctor" to another.

The office of Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland had not been occupied by royalty for three centuries or exercise a vote. His privileges and limitations are just as strangely varied as his titles. Walter Bagehot, the famous Victorian writer, once declared that the King had the power to disband the Army, dismiss all the officers, from the General-Commanding-in-Chief downwards, dismiss all naval officers and men and sell all warships, make every citizen in Britain a peer, make every parish a university, dismiss most Civil Servants and pardon all prisoners in the jails.

Queen Victoria, hearing of this, declared, "Oh, my people would not believe him!" Yet these strange loopholes in the Constitution still exist.

All Powers

The King must sign all documents put before him by responsible Ministers, even his own death warrant, if necessary. Yet he has the power to make treaties and alliances, give safe-conduct passes to enemies, and even away ships of the British Empire if he wishes! But if he list. All the clothes and insignia proper to them are duly stored in a series of wardrobes at Buckingham Palace, regularly inspected and kept in condition, and can be used on any appropriate occasion.

One of the most delightful retreats in the British Isles is Sandringham House in Norfolk. It was built by Edward VII and on his succession to the Throne became the property of the King.

His Majesty is Admiral of the Fleet; he climbed up through the Service, served two years with the Grand Fleet in the war, and was present at the Battle of Jutland, being mentioned in despatches for his coolness under fire. Trained in the latter years of the war as a practical flyer, he is equally suitably Marshal of the Royal Air Force. In addition, he is a Field-Marshal, Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Marines and Colonel-in-Chief of at least twenty regiments in England, not to mention several Indian regiments.

Though King, George the Sixth is still until the then Duke of York occupied it in 1929.

It is not generally known that the King is a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. He won a degree for himself at Cambridge, as well as being given honorary degrees and "freedoms" from universities and cities in all parts of the Empire.

Taxes He Must Pay

To some good purpose, too, His Majesty is President of the Industrial Welfare Society, of the Barnardo Homes, the Boys' Welfare Society, the National Playing Fields Association, and similar organizations.

And yet if he wanted land for any one of them, and could not gain it as a gift, he would have to buy it, except in the case of Cornwall.

He cannot enter the House of Commons did so, the Constitution would undoubtedly be revised to cover the situation.

Even the King's more ordinary powers are unusual. He need not pay rates on his palaces, but his private estates render him liable for the same taxes as any of his subjects. He can sue in court, but cannot be sued. Nor can his servants be proceeded against for anything done in good faith while in Crown service.

His motor-car need carry no number and his chauffeur observe no speed limit. He can make a will like any ordinary individual, but the document is not available to prying eyes.

The King has not the right to enter the Royal Box in a theatre without paying for it. If he visits a theatre in a private capacity, the orchestra must not play the National Anthem.

Fashions to the Queen's Taste

When the King and Queen visit Canada and the United States, fashion designers will whip out their notebooks to copy the Queen's dresses whenever she appears in public—and not only her dresses, but everything she wears from head to foot: hair ornaments, hats, coats, furs, shoes, stockings, gloves and handbags. Assistant designers will copy the copies in a variety of textures and fabrics. In the cheaper machine-made mass-production trade, the new models will be ready for the clamoring buyers in a fortnight or so, and in another week they will be taking the new fashions down off the peg in retail shops all over the country, writes Charles Pounds.

The great art of the fashion world are not quite so fast. There is not much that is machine-made and nothing at all that is mass-produced over their flashes of genius. Ordinarily they moon about until an idea strikes them, then they fly to their drawing blocks and dash off the first rough sketch of an evening gown that will cost up to $500 an ounce when it undulates through the carpeted and mirrored show on a manikin about a month later. It would be worth many thousands of dollars to them to know, say, a month in advance what the Queen was going to wear; but such secrets are guarded as jealously as the secrets of Budget Day.

Only in Public. When the Queen appears in public, every designer has the same chance. When she appears at a formal evening function, unless it happens to be a public function, no designer has any chance, for such functions cannot be gate-crashed. Usually the Queen has a new gown for every such event, but there is no means of discovering what it is until the official description is issued by one of the private secretaries after the event is over. It is a correct and complete description, for it is supplied to the press secretary in advance by the Queen's designer; but it is impossible to beg, buy, borrow or steal a copy of it until the press secretary issues it.

Once it is issued, the great showmen of the fashion world go feverishly to work with the design of the Queen's gown before them, roughing out sketches of their own, working them over in fur, in silk, in velvet, in silk, in embroidery, ornaments and feathers, trying out accessories to go with them—buttons, buckles, belts, even new neckties—and finally rushing the new design to the hundreds of girls who sit working by hand at their wooden frames in the workshops. About a month later, the filmy and shimmering new model will float swaying and turning and posing through the hushed show-room on a manikin, and you may be sure that the great man who designed it will be looking on anxiously and as critically as the architect of the Queen Mary must have looked on when that 80,000 tons slid into the Clyde at its launching.

Not As Queens. It was the same when the King and Queen visited Paris last Summer. The Queen changed three times a day in Paris, and every time into something new. Descriptions of her favorite party frocks for Bond Street and Fifth Avenue. Every button of every morning, afternoon and evening outfit that she wore, was news in the Rue de Rivoli and the Rue de la Paix. It will be the same this year. On the excitement will be greater still, for no wardrobe ever taken out of England by a British Queen has possessed such a fashion interest. How is it done? How does the Queen establish her fashions? Let it be said at once that English Queens do not establish fashions merely because they are Queens. What they wear is always correct in a strictly correct sense, but that may easily be all that can be said for it. An elderly Queen would hardly be regarded as a leader of fashion in any event, for fashion is the sport of younger women. Even a young Queen with good taste and original—not too original—ideas may wield a greater influence on fashions in some directions than in others.

How are fashions influenced? Who is it that sets women's fashions? For the woman who has ambitions in this mysterious and expensive field, several qualifications are essential. She must have good taste, the means to indulge it, and a social standing which makes her gowns news. She must have sufficient daring to break with what is being worn, for a new fashion is either different or it is not new. She must also have the figure of a manikin. If she has all these qualifications she is certain to be a valued client of some one of the "high dressmakers"; and when the new season's models are brought over from Paris for the Spring and Autumn shows, she gets first choice.

She pays, let us say, $300 for a copyrighted and exclusive model which might cost $150 if it went into the show for sale to any client of the house. When she appears in it, every well-dressed woman thinks how nice she herself would look in the same model. But it cannot be bought—or rather it is supposed to be exclusive to the one client. In actual practice, millions of words and gallons of tears flow over this practice of copyrighting models.

However, the other fashion houses soon have models of their own which embody the essential features of the copyrighted model and before long everybody is wearing them. By the end of the season, when the new fashion has fallen to the $3.98 class and every shop-girl is wearing it, the woman who began it all is wearing something else and another new fashion is in the making.

Conservation

In this sense the Queen can hardly be regarded as a leader of fashion in London. Her great position enforces a habit of conservation on her and forbids any bold departures from accepted standards. And, too, her figure is rather short. A woman of a different figure—the Duchess of Kent, for instance—wields a much wider influence on fashion in London than the Queen does. She can do things that the Queen cannot do. She wore ostrich feathers at Ascot last year—much to South Africa's delight. She wore black lace crinoline months before the Queen did. And yet special circumstances have occasionally brought very successful innovations from the Queen. A few seasons ago she gave Nottingham lace the same boon as the Duchess of Kent gave to South African ostrich feathers last year.

In her own capital the Queen's influence is a special one. Paris remains the classic source of women's fashions, but there are some sorts of women's wear which lie within the English genius—sports clothes, outdoor clothes, top coats and the grander kinds of formal wear. It is in connection with the last that the Queen occupies a pedestal which is all her own. In this conservative and restricted field she confers an incalculable prestige on everything she wears. In this respect, as in fact in her clothes generally, she has improved immensely since she became Queen. It has not been a gradual process of evolution, but rather a sharp break.

As Duchess of York she was not conspicuous as a leader of any branch of fashion. Indeed, her outdoor wear seemed so often to be the same—a beige tone costume with a fur and hat with a flower at one side—that this used sometimes to be described as her uniform. At that time she chose her wardrobe from the collections of models in the shops and went herself to the shops to choose what she wanted and be fitted. But when she became Queen, two years ago, she had to have models sent to Buckingham Palace for her inspection. She realized that what she wore would have its influence on trade, and her wardrobe became immensely larger and more expensive. She sacrificed her favorite party frocks for black-and-white ensembles and gave up simplicity for sophistication.

Always New

Not even the King's enormous wardrobe is as expensive as the Queen's. The uniforms and orders which constitute a large part of his wardrobe are remote from the passing fads of fashion; and even civilian wear changes comparatively little from season to season. The Queen, on the other hand, has always to be dressed in something new.

For state occasions her needs vary with her calendar. At the state opening of Parliament she will be arrayed in, let us say, a gown of gold crepe cloth, embroidered with iridescent beads with long tassels to match; and the whole front of her gown will be ablaze with diamonds—necklace after necklace of diamonds worn one below another. Her crimson velvet robe of state will be half hidden by an ermine wrap, and the Maltese crosses of her light diamond crown will sparkle on her head. For the three or four evening courts her gown will be of gold brocade, perhaps shimmering softly among the scarlet uniforms, the diamond tiaras and the rhododendrons and laburnum. At such a scene, you feel that Buckingham Palace is the one place in the world where time stands still and nothing ever changes.

For the Ascot races there will be dresses, it may be, of pale mauve embroidered with silver, a silver lace cape and a hat of shot mauve and silver tissue, and the jewels worn will be pearls and diamonds. State visits and state receptions are not as regular in their recurrence as Parliament, the evening courts and Ascot, but they are not less exacting in their requirements. Each of these has to have its regal new gown, in some cases a small wardrobe of new gowns, specially made for the occasion. And then there is the London season and the endless round of royal duties. For ordinary daily wear, some six dozen morning and afternoon dresses and evening gowns go into the Queen's wardrobe every year. She makes her choice twice a year, about three dozen dresses at a time.

Special Designs

It would be difficult for any collection of models to cope with the needs of such a wardrobe, and in fact the Queen long ago gave up relying on existing models. She now has all her dresses specially designed, each for its particular use or occasion. If she needs a gown for a state occasion, her designer, Norman Hartnell, is advised at least three months in advance.

Hartnell produces his designs in his own room at his house in Burton Street—a room of silver-gilt walls and carpet with lamps and vases of Wedgwood blue and the maximum of daylight. He has a mind well stored with the history of art and with the loveliest fashions of the past. He stormed Paris once, but he is pre-eminently a British designer. He is fond of what he calls "softness" and "subtlety" in women's dress, and Englishwomen, he thinks, are the most attractive of all women to dress. He thinks American women get top marks for makeup, stockings and accessories, but in their dress, he says, they are "snappy" rather than "subtle."

He has been the Queen's dress-maker for most of the two years in which she has been Queen. He did not make her coronation robes, but he has made all her dresses since. The Queen has wonderful blue eyes, worth a fortune to designers in the great tradition of Worth and Paquin, and it is not impossible that Hartnell's own devotion to Wedgwood blue derives from the Queen. He has taken great pains to absorb the artistic influences which have formed the Queen's tastes. His use of crinolines came direct from the picture gallery at Buckingham Palace.

Studies Paintings

Hartnell has studied the palace Winterhalls with care, for nobody else has ever painted queens, empresses and princesses as Winterhalls painted them. From the common world his elegant graceful women seem incredibly remote, and yet perhaps no more remote than is royalty in general. It was the Queen who suggested that he should try designing in the Winterhalter style, for she has a great fondness for picture dresses in the elegant, graceful Winterhalter vein.

When he embarks on a design for a state gown he throws away a dozen ideas before he hits upon one that he likes. At his shop they say that he sometimes drifts about his room for several days in his hunt for an idea. But, once he begins, things move quickly. His workshops are just the back of his mind, and the manufacturers of his materials all can be reached through the white telephone on his desk. Once he has solved the main problems of line and color and ornament in a rough-out sketch, materials begin to pile up around him. More and more silks and velvets and brocades are spread out in front of him, so that he can try out the effect as the design develops.

When he has settled upon materials and measurements, he works out the accessories—hat, fur, gloves and shoes. As soon as the ensemble is complete he makes an artist's sketch of it in colors. This is framed in light blue and silver and enclosed in a light blue folder about the size of this page. To this he attaches samples of the principal materials which he proposes to use, and the design is then ready for the Queen.

For All Occasions

From gorgeous state gowns down to ordinary day outfits, everything in the Queen's wardrobe is designed and submitted in the same way. On an average, Hartnell designs fifty complete outfits for the Queen every season, taking his designs to the palace, discussing them with the Queen, keeping in touch with their execution at his shop and returning to the palace to be present at the Queen's fittings.

Not all of the outfits involve as much work as the state and semi-state gowns for the Queen goes into these carefully. She is always open to suggestions, but she has decidedly well-defined tastes. It is said that for some of her garden party and evening gowns to be used during her visit she may select some of the new flower-bordered fabrics; that instead of crinoline she may choose pleated, tucked and draped evening gowns in Grecian style, and that some of her favorite blues are likely to be seen.

Twice a year Hartnell submits a score of designs for morning, afternoon and evening wear. The Queen goes through these rapidly, and the fittings that follow are made with nearly equal rapidity. These are not officially regarded as of public interest, and, in any event, anybody can see for himself what the Queen wears on her ordinary round of public duties.

WHEN ROYALTY TRAVELS

Royal visits all go so smoothly, so efficiently, are all so beautifully timed—but there's another side to the picture which you don't see. The moment that King or Queen B decides to take a little holiday quite a lot of people have to get frantically busy.

Preparations for a State visit of three days' duration are more like the arrangements for a world tour than anything else. They start as much as six months beforehand, writes Mark Wells.

Take, for example, the visit of King Carol to England. First of all, his journey across Europe had to be worked out in detail, and every stopping-place of the train timed to a second. Railway officials were holding conferences about this long beforehand.

King Carol arrived at Calais punctually to the minute, and only the English fog succeeded in upsetting the time-table.

Clothes a Nightmare

Clothes are a nightmare for those who have to pack a monarch's bags. First of all, the suitcases for every possible occasion are laid out with all their accompaniments checked and checked again.

Decorations and orders—an important item, this—are carefully gone over and a duplicate set made up just in case. Could anyone devise a worse dilemma than that of the valet who had forgotten to bring his master's favorite Order with royal guests downstairs, waiting for him to appear?

Royalty never travels without having full mourning in reserve. That may sound rather grim, but it is necessary. This was proved during the visit of Prince Paul of Jugoslavia and Princess Olga. They were already on their way to London when they heard of the death of Queen Maude of Norway.

They arrived at Victoria Station in full mourning.

When trunks and bags are finally packed, and the royal party are in their reserved coaches, you might think the worst is over. But not if it is a State visit. Any ruler who has paid a State visit to another capital would tell you—if he were frank—that it is the hardest work in the world. And so it is.

That is why such visits rarely last more than three days. Few human beings could stand the strain for longer. Only when, in early hours of the morning, they get to bed—probably too tired to be able to sleep—can they be said to be free. Every minute of the day has to be planned for official or semi-official visits or receptions.

And it is as tiring for the royal hosts as for their guests.

Varied Details

There are all sorts of things to be watched when royal personages visit another country. Many of them admit to some diet fad. Details of these are passed by their chef to the chef at the palace they are visiting.

One European monarch suffers from asthma; he travels with his own special sleeping pillows.

Sometimes, when the State visit is over, royal visitors to Buckingham Palace feel that they would like to stay a little longer and see London as it really is. In such cases they generally move to a famous hotel in the West End, which King Edward VII referred to as "Mother's Annex."

This was the only London hotel which Queen Victoria ever visited. She went there one day to call on the Empress Eugenie of France. The occasion was memorable. The empress was wearing one of the new Paris crinolines, and Queen Victoria was so pleased with it that she immediately adopted the idea herself. So for several years afterwards Englishwomen found themselves imprisoned in hoops.

Royalty always pays when it travels. And it pays full rates. True, kings and princes rarely handle money themselves. An equerry signs the cheque for the hotel bill and more than one London hotel manager has found what eagle eyes some of those equestrian pesters.

Royalty Has Great Endurance

Queen Mary Has Walked 100 Miles Visiting Fairs

Queen Mary has paid no fewer than thirty-eight visits to British Industries Fairs. Each year a check has been kept on her visits, and during her three-and-a-half-hour tour of Olympia in February last, she completed her 100th mile of walking at the fairs. Queen Mary is now seventy-one, and there are few people of her age, men or women, who could have stood the strain of walking and standing for so long a time as three-and-a-half hours.

2,000 Handshakes

All her family have inherited her powers of endurance. Our present King, who has never been particularly robust, is a wonderful walker. There are not many people who know the lanes and footpaths around Sandringham as he does, and wild foot shooting, of which he is very fond, is a real test of endurance.

The Duke of Windsor, when in South Africa in 1925, shook hands with 2,000 guests at the City Hall at Capetown, and after this terrific function, danced till four in the morning, and turned out five-and-a-half hours later, fresh as paint.

The late King George used to walk immense distances when stag shooting at Balmoral. And it should be remembered that stalking means climbing and crawling up and down slopes that are almost precipitous. On one occasion he killed eight stags in six days' stalking, without one blank day.

The Duke of Gloucester could always hold his own in long route marches, and his prowess at polo-and-in-the-hunting-field is well known.

The powers of physical endurance shown by our royalties may perhaps be inherited from that wonderful old man, the late King Christian of Denmark, father of Queen Alexandra. When he was eight-four years of age he was out riding alone, when his horse got frightened, bolted, and jumped a ditch and wall into a villa garden. There he aged monarch, who had not turned a hair, recovered control of his mount.

Royal Mountaineer

The present King Christian, who is now sixty-nine, still plays lawn tennis and swims.

The best athlete of any who occupy a throne today is probably King Leopold of the Belgians. His favorite exercise has always been mountain climbing, and he is still able to do as much in that respect as any man of his age, which is now thirty-eight.—T. C. Bridges.

Queen Mary Loves Royal Blue Shade

Queen Mary carries her love of a touch of blue even into her choice of antiques. Two miniature urns that she selected at the Antique Dealers' Fair at Grosvenor House are made of solid lapis lazuli, mounted in gilt. Another purchase was a doll's tea-set painted with flowers, blue being the predominant shade.

Regency times, a period that appeals to her immensely, produced two cabinets which are to be sent to her at Marlborough House, for her final decision. They are in rosewood and croul, plaques inlaid on the doors providing in this case a touch of Wedgwood blue.

Canadian Rugs For Queen

Queen Elizabeth's room in the Royal Suite at Rideau Hall, Ottawa, has an all-Canadian rug on the floor. Her Excellency the Lady Tweedsmuir made sure that when at the Royal Winter Fair she paid a surprise visit to the National Exhibition of Canadian Handicraft Guild, shortly after she and the Governor-General, both patrons of the Guild, had made their official visit. She went alone, she explained, so she might "stay" as long as she liked, examine carefully and make some particular selections.

Notable among her purchases was a hooked rug in floral design made by women of rural Cape Breton, of vegetable-dyed Canadian wool in tones of blue, rose and beige. This will form the nucleus of the decoration scheme which the official hostess of their Majesty is arranging for Queen Elizabeth's personal boudoir. A second rug in gayer colors was selected for the Lady Tweedsmuir's own sitting room.
